The idea of computer design for say building a model is very daunting to me as i am not confident in any type of computer modeling software. I may stay away from this field though the experience could be either enlightening and make me want to continue modelling this way, or i can have a completely negative response and have my end product suffer. To keep it safe i might stick to what i know.

MATERIALS in ARCHITECTURE

Text by Barry Smith | Designed by Raghav Aranyasphar

Since the beginning of human history, construction materials and methods have been a key factor in the development of human dwellings. Each material invented has shaped a new era of architectural history.

The world's first permanent buildings were probably constructed during the neolithic revolution, when humans moved from a nomadic hunter-gatherer lifestyle to agriculture.

BRICK
7,000 BCE

With the first settlements appearing in the Middle East, the first construction materials were likely to have been sun-baked clay bricks. Bricks are still one of the world's most common construction materials.

TIMBER
8,500 BCE

In 2000, archaeologists stated the remains of a wooden hut unearthed in England to around 8,200 BCE, making it the oldest recorded evidence of a timber structure.

GRANITE, LIMESTONE
3,100 BCE

The Ancient Egyptians were among the first civilizations to build their monumental structures in stone, primarily using locally available granite and limestone.

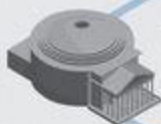

MARBLE
650 BCE

It was around 650 BCE that the Ancient Greeks began to build their temples in stone rather than timber. For them, marble was simply the locally available choice. However, it has gained an aura of majesty after the Romans, and later Renaissance builders, went to great lengths to acquire marble to emulate the beauty of Greek temples.

CONCRETE
20

Though some may associate concrete with modern buildings, it has been in use since Roman times, with Vitruvius outlining a recipe of parts in his 10 books on architecture. The famous dome of the Pantheon was constructed in concrete and remains the world's largest unreinforced concrete dome.

The Pantheon
Rome, Italy (126 AD)

GLASS
100

Glass windows were another Roman invention, with their first appearance in Roman-era Egypt. These windows, made by simply flattening blown glass, had poor optical qualities. New methods of manufacturing in the 12th and 13th centuries would produce glasses of higher quality (flint glass and crown glass) an important factor in the development of Gothic cathedrals around this time.

IRON
700

Though iron had been used in buildings for centuries (iron tie stabilized Roman arches, for example), the first known use of iron as a primary structural material was in late 18th century China, when the Tang Dynasty constructed a number of cast-iron pagodas. After the Tang Dynasty's demise, iron was largely forgotten as a construction material for almost 2000 years.

1775

Iron Bridge

Iron was rediscovered as a construction material in 1775, when it was used to build the Iron Bridge in England. Iron structures were an important feature in the Industrial Revolution, the development of iron buildings would in the Part of this problem, posed by one Ernst Straus in 1952, is to design a polygonal room lined with mirrors having at least two points such that any ray starting at one point can reflect around the room forever without hitting the other point, and vice versa. One such room, shown above, was demonstrated by George Tokarsky in 1995. It has 26 walls.
